Peer-review process

1) Writers submit papers/book manuscripts to editors who give them a first look. If it looks good to them, they pass it on to peer reviewers, other experts who review the work.

2) They read the work to check for errors in methods, data interpretation, conclusions, etc. They send feedback to the editors, recommending publication, revision, or outright rejection.

3) The editors send the feedback to the writers who can accept publication or make revisions and resubmit their work.
